

Imagology and Nakhchivan and The Silk Road

Samira Bameshki ¹ and Shamsi Parsa ^{2*}

¹ Assistant Professor of Persian language and literature from Ferdowsi University of Mashhad, Mashhad, Iran,

²Department of Persian Language and Literature, Faculty of Humanities, Semnan Branch, Islamic Azad University, Semnan, Iran

*Corresponding Author

Abstract

One of the most recent studies in comparative literature is imagology. The study of Other's image in literary texts is a kind of comparative reading. The main question of the current essay is about how Nakhchivan is illustrated in Persian literature? The purpose is the discovery and evaluation of Nakhchivan's image in Persian authors and travelers' perspective like Nasere Khosro. The way of Nakhchivan's representation as a way for othering is not void of distortion but conception of this process is significant for finding out othering function. Travelling is not transparent activity. It is very definitely located activity, with points of origin, points of departure and destinations. The great development in comparative literary studies is that such questions about not only to compare accounts by travellers, but to question the premises on which those accounts were written in the first place.

Key words: Nakhchivan The Silk Road, imagology